McKanna began as a customer service representative when he was 16 years-old at Lewisville Domino's Pizza and worked his way towards becoming a manager.

"I worked hard and excelled as a customer service representative at Domino's," said Corey. "I remained dedicated and gave it my all with a manager role in mind. I knew this type of position would provide me with the foundation to achieve some of my life goals, such as providing some type of service or charity to my community while still doing something I enjoy – and it has."

The U.S. Manager of the Year award recognizes exceptional store managers who live the company's mission and guiding principles. McKanna was selected from nearly 5,000 store managers across the United States. McKanna works for Domino's Pizza franchise owner Robert Gavitt at the Lewisville, Texas Domino's Pizza store.

"My goal is to become a franchise owner in the next two years," said Corey. Along those same lines, it is my personal goal to raise $1 million for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Whether it is through stores I own, stores I manage or personal donations, I am dedicated to making this happen."

"Corey is an unbelievable store operator who has proven time and again an outstanding commitment to making his customers happy," said Scott Hinshaw, Domino's Pizza executive vice president of franchise operations. "We are fortunate to have such a positive leader who places so much value in his customers and team members. This is a great testimony to Corey, his team and work ethic and I can't congratulate him enough."

"Being recognized as the U.S. Manager of the Year is such an honor for me and my team members," said McKanna. "We work hard to provide great service to our customers and are looking forward to dedicating ourselves to running the best stores possible. I'm here to do whatever it takes to make the corporation, my employees, the franchise and myself successful. I will continue to do it the best I can this year and every year after that."
